As of May, 20 partners collectively provided both food, agriculture and livelihoods assistance to 323,034 people which represents only 28% of the people in need of food security assistance. Though there has been an increasing need for livelihood-related support by the affected population, only 4% of the total beneficiaries have been so far supported through agriculture and livelihoods activities like home gardening, poultry, grants for small business. An integrated approach of food and livelihoods to same beneficiaries is highly recommended at this time to enable the population become self-reliant and provide their basic needs for decent survival. With just a little over 2% funding received through the HRP, many actors of the food security cluster are incapacitated to provide humanitarian assistance to the food insecure population thereby leaving almost 800,000 people with no food security assistance at all.
