Following the resumption of livelihood activities in September, WFP has continued to scale up the Food Assistance for Training project while following COVID-19 precautions.

A total of 492 people, including over 60% women, attended trainings in the Zwara, Ghadames, Nalut, Al Jabal Al Gharbi and Tawergha regions. Trainings covered a variety of topics, including cooking, plastering, sewing, and door & window manufacturing.

WFP began piloting online life-skills learning as part of the vocational training programme, with over 50 users accessing the platform so far. Through an innovative learning platform, participants are able to access trainings through smartphones and computers, covering communication skills, personal finance skills, and the International Computer Driving License course.

This adaptation due to COVID-19 could provide life-changing support to participants, potentially opening other livelihood opportunities to vulnerable households.
In addition to trainings, WFP is engaged with farmers and agriculture experts through the Agriculture Information Network. Approximately 540 people across multiple virtual groups are discussing agricultural problems and sharing solutions.

Moreover, WFP finalised a contract to pilot a hydroponics project in Sebha through a local partner. The project will start shortly and aims to involve women, IDPs, migrants, and local communities engaged in farming, and who will benefit from growing hydroponic fodder for their animals.

On 15 November, WFP and UNWomen launched a joint initiative on empowering women and livelihoods in the border communities between Tunisia and Libya, advocating for a greater role for women in local economies, and analysing how conflict, livelihoods and gender interact.
